Langley Recognized by North Carolina Governor

Durham, NC - DeWarren Langley, a rising senior earning a degree in business management with an emphasis in economics and a minor in leadership studies at Hampton University received a Certificate of Appreciation from North Carolina Governor, Michael Easley and the North Carolina Cooperative Extension 4-H and Youth Development program.

Langley was recognized for his dedication and devotion in providing volunteer services to North Carolina's greatest resource, her people.

DeWarren lead a team of INROADS interns to build and strengthen Raleigh's youth workforce by explaining, discussion, modeling, encouraging and providing information on the significance of education; interview management skills; career planning; developing and maintaining professional resumes and skill development. The interns developed trainings throughout the summer which also included the junior friend's shadowing the INROADS interns.

The summer concluded with a graduation ceremony held Saturday, July 29 at North Carolina State University during which the junior friends received certificates for their summer participation.

"The globalization of the world economy and corporate business has placed an unprecedented demand for our youth. While the demands on today's youth are high, adequate and sufficient resources are not readily available to assist impoverished minority youth to transform professionally to the growing demand of the global business environment and economy," says Langley about youth workforce development.

INROADS' mission is to develop and place talented minority youth in business and industry and prepare them for corporate and community leadership. The interns worked with the North Carolina Cooperative Extension 4-H and Youth Development program in Raleigh, which Langley also received a Certificate of Appreciation for sharing his time, knowledge and experience in making a difference.
